The Freedmen were the former slaves of the two nations that migrated to Indian Territory in the 1830s. Freed by the treaty of 1866 the two groups remained in the the land of their birth, according to the traditions of the land where they were born. Many of the Freedmen emerged as leaders in their communities as they made efforts to establish themselves on footing the the land where many and their elders had once been enslaved. The challenges that faced the former slaves were grave as they negotiated life in the Territory. The Choctaw-Chickasaw Freedmen Association, seeks to encourage research, explore the history of the eastern communities of Oklahoma, and to support the efforts of the inclusion of the Freedmen in the histories of their nations, to inform the community of the issues as they effect the Freedmen and their descendants, and to express solidarity with others who have concerns and interests of the Freedmen of the Five Civilized Tribes.”*
